ABOUT FOOD CHECK-OUT WEEK

The third week of February is Food Check-Out Week, a time to celebrate the abundance of fresh and nutritious food available to consumers at affordable prices.

The average American household spends less than 10 percent of their disposable income on food. This is the lowest of any country.

According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the average family of four will earn enough money to pay for their entire food supply for one year after seven weeks of working. By comparison, it takes 100 days of work to earn enough income to pay your taxes.

Farm Bureau members statewide use this week to highlight Florida agriculture and the healthy and nutritious food that farmers and ranchers provide us throughout the year.

Some community projects that Farm Bureau members have been involved in include mystery shopper events, food sampling booths, celebrity chef cook-offs, Farm-to-Table events, classroom activities, pop-tab collection drives, contributions to Ronald McDonald House Charities, Inc. and aid to local food banks.

TALKING POINTS

- The average American is three generations removed from the farm. Food Check-Out Week is a time to recognize the productivity of farmers and ranchers and help educate more people about where their food comes from.
- Officially celebrated in the third week of February, Food Check-Out Week is traditionally the time that many families have earned enough income to buy their groceries for the year.
- When applied to calendar days, the average American earns enough income to pay for an annual supply of food in just seven weeks. By comparison, the same person must work until mid-April to pay for yearly income taxes. That's seven weeks for food and more than three months for taxes.
- American consumers spend less than 10 percent of their disposable income (money for spending or saving) for food, compared to 18 percent in 1960. (U.S. Department of Agriculture's Economic Research Service)
- Based upon the most recent studies, the U.S. Department of Agriculture reports that the "farmer's share" of the food marketing bill at the grocery store or restaurant is 10.4 cents.
- According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture's 2014 Consumer Expenditure Survey, 59 percent of domestic food purchases are groceries for home, while 41 percent is spent at a restaurant.
- Technological advances in agriculture have been influential in driving change in the farm sector. Farmers are able to grow more on less land. Total farm output more than doubled between 1948 to 2011.
- A health-boosting diet includes varieties of fruits, vegetables, low-fat or fat-free dairy products, lean meats, beans, eggs and nuts in quantities for daily calorie needs. According to the USDA, all forms of fruits and vegetables count towards a good diet – fresh, frozen, dried and canned.
- Plan balanced meals using the U.S. Department of Agriculture's MyPlate food guidelines. Visit <http://www.choosemyplate.gov/> for more information.

- The agency recommends that half of your plate should consist of fruits and vegetables; half of all grains should be whole grains. USDA researchers also suggest the use of fat-free or low-fat milk.
- Local farmers' markets often have fresh vegetables, fruits, meats and other items that have been produced in the surrounding area near your home.
- Both crop and animal food production are guided by Best Management Practices – state-of-the-art techniques designed and tested by experts at research universities.
- Energy prices will continue to play a major role in retail prices for food and other items in the U.S. economy. The recent declines in fuel prices will ease the upward pressure on most consumer items.
- Last year Florida Farm Bureau's Young Farmers and Ranchers have donated more than 21 million pounds of fresh produce and food to assist hungry Americans. This is just one example of Farm Bureau members' generous contributions to their communities.
- The Florida Farm Bureau Women have distributed more than $200,000 to various charities through the Women's Fund.
- Support local farmers and ranchers by purchasing the foods they produce.

MEDIA TIPS

The general news media are great targets to help amplify your message for Food Check-Out Week. Reach out to reporters early. Here are just a few tips:

Select a Media Relations Liaison

Designate one person to serve as your media relations liaison. The person will be the main contact for Food Check-Out Week events and will respond to media inquiries.

Identify Your Spokesperson(s)

Identify area farmers and ranchers who can talk about what they do and the impact their enterprises have on the local economy. Identify local leaders who will talk about their support of agriculture and agricultural issues. You can also work with your local IFAS Extension office to provide a speaker on specific topics relating to health and nutrition. A local dietician may also be available to speak.

Contact the Media

Contact your local media to inform them of your Food Check-Out Week event. Tailor and localize the sample news release to increase your chances of coverage. Send the release to electronic and print media reporters and assignment editors in your area. Be sure to follow-up with key contacts to discuss local news and feature angles (i.e. food bank donations or grocery store events) for Food Check-Out Week. Do not expect coverage if you wait until the "eleventh hour."

Have a Hook

What makes your event and activities around Food Check-Out Week unique, exciting, and relevant to the issues news outlets are covering in your area? Reporters and readers want a storyline that helps them understand why something is new and different. You are more likely to get coverage by focusing on the local people involved with your event, (i.e. farmers who donate to a charity, participate in a food display or any issue relevant to your community).

Media Advisory/Press Release

A media advisory is different than a press release. An advisory is sent before an event to the media to urge them to attend. Be sure to include the what, when where, when, why and who of the event. Send your advisory out 1 week before event (earlier depending on your newspaper circulation). Follow-up with a courtesy call one-to-two days prior to your event. A press release includes information on Food Check-Out Week and quotes from your spokesperson. It is intended to provide reporters information to include in a story.

Letter to Editor

In preparation for Food Check-Out Week, write a letter to your local newspaper editor in support of the week. Be sure to write a positive editorial about how the event impacts the local economy or community. You want to include any facts in support of your topic. Research in advance the newspaper staff member who covers agricultural, food and local issues.

SAMPLE LETTER TO THE EDITOR

[Contact Name and Information]

Dear Editor:

The foundation of our well-being as a society depends upon the domestic production of food. Our farmers and ranchers provide us with an abundant, nutritious food supply throughout the year.

In recognition of this achievement, members of the _____ County Farm Bureau and _____ will celebrate Food Check-Out Week from Feb. 15 through Feb.19. We will <STATE EVENT OR PROJECT.>

We are pleased to share this abundance with our fellow residents.

Thanks to the productivity and efficiency of Florida's agricultural producers, they continue to maintain a stable bounty of food in our communities. Their dedication and skill levels have overcome a difficult marketplace, weather extremes and plant and animal pests and diseases.

Their effective natural resource management provides crucial environmental benefits to all Floridians. According to state officials, farmers and ranchers conserve 12 billion gallons of water each year by their care.

Farm families achieve these successes despite receiving a steadily smaller portion of the retail grocery dollar. According to new U.S. Department of Agriculture data, in 1973 farmers and ranchers received approximately 30 cents out of every dollar spent on food. By 2018, the share farmers and ranchers received had declined to approximately 10.4 cents. The pattern remains the same for this year. Off-farm costs - processing, packaging, transportation, wholesaling and retailing - account for the majority of the food prices consumers pay.

Most of the recent increases in retail food prices have been the result of higher prices of energy needed to process, haul and refrigerate food.

Our bountiful domestic food supply is the product of skill and dedication. We invite area residents to join us in celebrating the farmers and ranchers who grow healthy and nutritious foods.

The _____ County Farm Bureau urges you to join us in our Food Check-Out Week event(s). We are proud to highlight Florida agriculture and the people who make it successful.

(Signed)

EVENT AND CELEBRATION IDEAS

Here are some "tried-and-true" ideas that have worked well for celebrating Food Check-Out Week!

Farmer's Markets

Local farmer's markets provide a great opportunity to highlight the necessary relationships between farmers and consumers. Set up a booth and make a day of it with nutritional hand-outs, fun kid-friendly games and tasting demos. See our recipe card template at the end of this kit to use for your own favorite recipe!

Food Check-Out Week Breakfast

Host a Food Check-Out Week breakfast for local government and business leaders. Identify a keynote speaker to talk about healthy and nutritious foods and the local impact agriculture has. Plan your menu around local commodities. You may also consider working with other civic groups such as Kiwanis, Lions or Rotary clubs. If you live in a college town, reach out to the Collegiate Farm Bureau chapter or local sorority or fraternity groups.

Grocery Store Display

Work with local grocery stores to set-up educational stations throughout the store in the produce, dairy, meat and bakery sections. Reach out to local farmers to help work at the stations. Shoppers are able to meet local farmers and learn about healthy foods. Check to find out if the grocery store manager will include Food Check-Out Week fact cards in the grocery bags or on the carts.

Cooking Demonstrations

Work with a local grocery store to host a cooking demonstration using local products. Partner with store employees or the local culinary school students to create a recipe. Be sure to use the Food Check-Out Week recipe card as a hand-out.

Fitness Fair

Host a farm or health and nutrition fair. Possible partners you could reach out to include your Extension office, a health clinic, a gym facility and area farmers and ranchers. Consider working with the American Heart Association (Wear Red Day is Feb. 1) to help promote eating healthy.

Legislative Farm Tour

Invite one or more state legislators to visit local farms and ranches to help bring awareness to the positive impact of agriculture on the local economy. You could have a public signing of the proclamation on the farm to further hook media. Include a bagged lunch with agriculture facts.

Day on the Farm

Host a classroom field trip to a local farm or ranch or to a university's agricultural research farm. This is a great opportunity for children to learn about where their food comes from. You can also invite a farmer or rancher to speak to a local classroom.

Ronald McDonald Promotion

Work with the local McDonald's fast-food chain (or any restaurant) and promote the week with a healthy menu tie-in. Proceeds for selected menu items could be donated to the local Ronald McDonald House.

Host a Celebrity Cook-Off

Host a celebrity cook-off with a local media celebrity, farmer and local chef. Use a local personality to MC the event and use ticket sale proceeds to fund a local charity or Ronald McDonald House.

Farm to Table

Work with a local farmer to host a farm-to table meal event. Promote the fact that proceeds will support a local charity, food bank or scholarships for the local FFA or 4-H chapter.

School Lunches

Work with local schools and the school lunch program to have agricultural displays set up to help explain the connection between farm and mealtime. Host a healthy menu contest. Have students create their own menu by using locally-sourced products. The winning menu can be featured on the monthly school menu.

Library Display

Work with your local library to feature a Food Check-Out Week display. Choose books on food and farms to encourage children to learn more about agriculture and how it affects their lives. At the same time, show books about eating healthy to promote fresh fruit and vegetables.

Food Drive

Work with your local food pantry or charitable organization to organize a food drive. Many farms share their unused harvest with local food banks so that underprivileged community members can enjoy nutritious and wholesome foods.

Media Luncheon

Host a media luncheon and treat them like stars. Feed them and give them their own farm tour. Increasing their understanding may lead to better coverage.

School Garden

Start a school garden at an area school that doesn't have one. Start teaching young people about where their food comes from and the importance of agriculture.

Leverage Resources

As you plan your Food Check-Out Week, be sure to tap into your community. Many school clubs are eager to help with an event and can use the time for necessary community service hours required for graduation. FFA and 4-H students are great resources to help with agricultural events.
